KILLS PAIN

RIVER HIGH

Out Of Its Banks Yesterday Morning and Above Second Street Bridge.

The heavy rain that continued for more than twenty-four hours, with only slight intermissions; put the river out of its banks by yesterday morning. The Second Street bridge was entirely covered except the railings, and the North Main Street bridge was cut off on the north side by a flow of water around the bridge, overflowing the entrance to the Cemetery. It began falling after daylight and receded rapidly. The rainfall was the heaviest in one day for many months. It has made the dirt roads almost impassible.

CASE OF SMALLPOX.

Mr. Wm. L. Walden, who had been ill for a week, was reported by the city health officer, Dr. J. W. Harned, to have a mild case of smallpox. A quarantine was established at his own rooms, in a Main street apartment house, in the absence of an eruptive hospital. Mrs. Walden is with him. It is not believed the disease will spread. It is not known how he contracted it, as there have been no other cases here.

"Baby" Flatiron More Than a Toy.
A "baby" flatiron weighing exactly one pound not only provides the "little mothers" with an incentive to indulge in industry at an early age, but it is useful for light pressing and lingerie, faces and handkerchiefs. The iron is very useful for traveling, because of its light weight and its compactness. It operates on less than 130 volts, and is equipped with connector plugs and six feet of maroon cord.

PLANTERS HARDWARE CO.
INCORPORATED.

BUCK BRAND OVERALLS CO

Will Be Located In The Second Story of Forbes Office Building.

W. R. Wheeler & Co., have agreed to rent the upper story of their building, the Forbes office building, to the Buck Brand Overalls Co., which will soon establish its plant here. The location is an excellent one from every standpoint. As a work room it will be all that could be desired, and the location is in the heart of the business district.

It is not uncommon for people to make duties of their inclinations, and to take great credit for the self-denial with which they gratify themselves.

ST. PATRICK'S LUNCHEON.

The opportunities to express originality are many in celebrating St. Patrick's day. One may express good taste with inexpensive material by studying the old traditions which play an important part in the history of the day. Gilt harps with Killarney roses may be used as decorations. Small green hats filled with green and white mints, green candles, green shamrocks for place cards, and joke favors of various wiggly spiders and snakes may be used in appropriate boxes. Small pots of shamrock may be used as top to the ice cream, served in small flower pots, wax paper lined.

The menu may consist of a variety of good things, depending upon the pocketbook, time to be spent in preparation and one's taste.

For a beginning salmon canape or any kind desired, served on toast, cut in the form of the shamrock.

Salmon mixed with salad dressing, spread over the buttered toast, then sprinkled so generously over the fish that it makes a solid green color. Use cress or parsley stems for the stem of the shamrock.

Creamed chicken may be served in small croustades of bread, with the edges decorated with finely minced green peppers, or cress may be used, if the pepper is served in some other dish.

Watercress salad cannot be improved upon for a simple with French dressing.

Shamrock Salad.—Mix cream with cream cheese to the consistency to mold, add seasonings of salt and red pepper and press this into green peppers that have been cut off at the stem end with seeds and white membranes removed. If one is careful about choosing the shapely peppers, when sliced in half-inch slices they are shaped like a shamrock with the edge of green, making a most attractive cheese or salad. Serve as a salad with mayonnaise and garnish with a radish tulp if desired.

Butter rolled in chopped parsley, small cakes decorated with pistachio nuts; ice cream or ices served colored green, will all carry out the color scheme.

GEORGIA'S VENTURE

By IZOLA FORRESTER.

When Georgia rented the Sinclair house and took a lease on the little old Buxton inn down by the postroad, Arbundale lifted its lorgnette, so to speak, in marked disapproval.

In the first place, if one must be straitened in circumstances, there was really no need of advertising the fact. She might have stayed on at the great old mansion on the hill road and done something that was—well, unobtrusive and genteel, if she had to increase her income. Mrs. Dorian tried to make her see this, and Georgia only pushed back her thick brown hair and laughed.

"But there wasn't any income to increase," she laughed. "All at once and nothing first, don't you know, Mrs. Dorian, like the one-hoss shay. Dad's lawyers just wrote from New York that the railroad had gone into the hands of a receiver, and, of course, all of his money went with it. They may reorganize, but it will take time. And, meanwhile, we've got to live whether Arbundale approves or not."

"And what does Malcolm say?" queried Mrs. Dorian.

Georgia looked down the lovely stretch of country road, all fresh with spring blossoms and bright warm greens. She had rather left Malcolm out of the calculations. Malcolm belonged to the realm of the big house on the hill, and the Country club and affluence.

"He doesn't know," she answered. "But you were engaged, weren't you, Georgia? At least it was always understood—"

"No," said Georgia, quite gently. "We were never really engaged, Mrs. Dorian. We were just good friends always. I hope the little inn won't spoil that."

Malcolm did not hear of the inn or Georgia's venture for nearly a month; not until his return South. Then, the first night of his arrival he missed her at the Country club dance and asked for her.

"Well, you know, it's Georgia's own fault that she was dropped," said Frances Marbury, with lifted eyebrows. "Oh, she wasn't really dropped. I don't mean that, but she went into business, you see, sort of trade, keeping a little inn down on the post road, and Mrs. Dorian tried to get the house committee to ignore it, but they took it up. Mrs. Elliston is on it, and simply said it would never do. So Georgia sent in her resignation."

"Good Lord," ejaculated Malcolm. "General Farrington's granddaughter and old Langdon Sinclair's daughter."

"Just what we all said. It's terrible, isn't it?"

"Terrible for Arbundale and the Country club," answered Malcolm, grimly. "The prim idiots."

The following day he rode down to see the mistress of the inn. She looked very sweet and charming in her little private sitting room across the hall from the long, narrow dining room.

"Why on earth didn't you let me know?"

"I don't know; there wasn't anything to do. Dad just gave up when the railroad went to smash. Aunt Anne says he's better since she took him up to the springs. And I do enjoy this, Malcolm, only—"

she hesitated, and laughed, "have you heard about the Country club? That was the first shock they gave me."

Malcolm rode back with grim determination in his heart. A telegram went speeding north to his lawyers to dig up the railroad case, and see where the Sinclair stock stood. Then he went to his mother, Margaret Joscelyn, who had swayed society affairs up at the capital in her younger days, and was still the most admired and exclusive person in the county, in spite of her invalidism. He told her all about Georgia, all that her happiness meant to him.

"I love her and am going to marry her, mother, and I want you to manage the rest. Will you?"

"Dear lad, of course," she said, tenderly.

The following week Arbundale knew that Mrs. Joscelyn had driven down to the inn and had drunk tea with its mistress out on the cool little veranda in full view of the post road and passersby. The next shot out of a clear sky was the announcement of a select dance given by Mrs. Joscelyn at the Country club in Miss Sinclair's honor. And Mrs. Elliston and several other members were not invited. But Malcolm smiled as he led Georgia out into the cool sweetness of the moonlit walks.

"Well, it was a campaign, wasn't it?" he said happily. "Mother enjoyed it, too."

"You've been wonderful to me," Georgia said, with a little sigh. "I suppose it does matter, but I didn't mind. She's giving a luncheon next week, too, did you know?"

Malcolm nodded his head and lifted his hand in his.

"To announce our engagement, dear," he said gently. "I've heard from the lawyers, and it's all right for Mr. Sinclair. The old stockholders are to hand in their stock and receive the equivalent in the new company. We are engaged, aren't we, Georgia?"

Georgia lifted her lashes, her dark eyes full of happiness, and amusement, too.

"What will I do with the inn, Malcolm?"

"Keep it, dear, as a souvenir of your independence."

BRICK HOUSE IS DESTROYED

Flames Consume Residence, Near Julien, Built Before War.

The old Brick residence near Julien, known as the Rossington place, and owned by Mr. G. H. Stowe, was destroyed by fire one day last week, causing a loss of several hundred dollars. The house was built before the civil war and was one of the oldest buildings in that section. It is not known how the flames originated. A family was moving into the house and had gotten in some of the furniture when the fire was discovered.

Had Worked Hard.

Elizabeth, aged four, is very fond of a young woman who lives across the street from her grandmother. One Saturday she had coaxed all day to be allowed to go over, but her grandmother said, "No, they are busy over there, and don't want you." Finally, late in the afternoon, a member of the family across the street called her to come over and get a toy belonging to her. When she was safely in the house she drew a long breath and exclaimed, "Gracious, I've worked hard all day to get over here!"

Wampum Beads.

Wampum beads were made from a variety of different substances, but the one that was used in the greatest numbers was the ordinary hard clam or quahog, which is found from Cape Cod to Florida. Roger Williams, writing of the eastern Indians, states that they "store up shells in summer against winter, whereof they make their money."

MARRIAGES.

Orten-Hefflin.

A marriage license was issued Saturday to Roy Orten and Miss Hazel Hefflin, young folks of North Christian, and the wedding is scheduled for tomorrow, at Esq. F. L. Hamby's. The groom-to-be is a son of Mr. J. D. Orten. Miss Hefflin is a daughter of Mr. C. F. Hefflin.

Bullard-Higgins.

At an announcement tea Friday afternoon, at the beautiful home of the future bride's uncle, Mr. E. H. Higgins, formal announcement was made of the engagement and approaching marriage of Miss Nora Elizabeth Higgins to Mr. Gano H. Bullard. The wedding will be in the near future. The house decorations were beautiful and delicious refreshments were served. The bride-to-be is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Higgins and is an exceptionally bright and lovable girl, who is very popular with a wide circle of friends. She graduated with honors from the City High School a few years ago and has filled official positions in the offices of City Tax collector, City Clerk and County Sheriff. Mr. Bullard is a popular young merchant doing business in the Rex Theatre building.

Mountain Teacher Shot.

Wilburn Taylor, deputy Sheriff of Harlan county, was dangerously shot Saturday afternoon near his home in Layman, Ky., when he attempted to arrest two men who were drinking. He was shot almost to pieces, being hit nine times. One of his adversaries was also wounded. Mr. Taylor is one of the most prominent mountain school teachers, having been offered some of the best schools of the country. His recovery is very uncertain, the doctors say.

Miss Margaret Ruffin, of Memphis, has joined the navy as a "yeoman," or clerk.

NO KISSING IN JAP MOVIES

Oriental Censors Bar All Osculation Scenes In Films.

"Romeo and Juliet" (Flickerfilm Company)—Cutout kissing in balcony scene; reduce throwing kiss to flash; very detrimental to public safety and morals.

Such is the heartless verdict of the Japanese movie censor on the job, from whose word there is no appeal. His scissors are ever working their jaws, alert for swooping down upon such lawless photoplay subjects as the commission of a murder, the robbery of a bank or the methods of counterfeiters. But when he sees scenes depicting kissing—"Togo, bring out the two-edged Samurai sword of our ancestors."

The police censors of Tokio are kept busy deleting kissing scenes from American made films, according to T. Maruyama, director of public safety, Tokio metropolitan police bureau.

"In Japan public kissing is considered extremely shocking and degrading and cannot be tolerated for a minute in the films," the Tokio police officials said at the Congress Hotel. "American made pictures favor kissing scenes, many of which you call 'close ups.' There is no appeal from the ruling of the Japanese censor, who also has supervision over newspapers and magazines."

Germany's submarines cost about $250,000 each and carry crews of 30 men. England caught many of them in nets, many have been sunk in action, but only Germany knows the number that left home and never came back.
